Purpose

This policy describes the company's general approach to performance reviews, goal setting, feedback, and performance ratings.

Review Cycle

Employees normally receive a formal performance review once each year. Some teams may conduct additional reviews or checkpoints during the year.

Goal Setting

Performance goals should be agreed between the employee and reporting manager at the beginning of the review period. Goals should be clear enough to measure progress.

Regular Feedback

Managers are encouraged to provide feedback throughout the year instead of waiting for the formal review.

Self Assessment

Employees may be asked to provide a self-assessment describing achievements, challenges, learning, and progress against agreed goals.

Performance Rating

Performance ratings consider achievement of goals, quality of work, collaboration, reliability, and professional behavior. The exact rating scale may be defined by the organization.

Improvement Plan

When performance does not meet expectations, the manager may define an improvement plan with clear expectations, support, and review dates.

Promotion

Strong performance does not automatically guarantee promotion. Promotion decisions also depend on role availability, business requirements, skills, and organizational processes.
